History of the Department of Law

The Department of Law came into existence in 1920 together with the Rangoon University, what is today the University of Yangon. It was one of seven original affiliated faculties of the Rangoon University.

Our Vision

To be a leading institution contributing to the advancement of legal education and the legal profession, and conducting research to meet national, regional and international challenges.

Our Mission

The mission of the Law Department of the University of Yangon is to:

1. be a model faculty to promote legal education;
2. nurture qualified graduates professionally and ethically;
3. conduct research to meet the needs of country;
4. expand academic collaborations, research, culture and exchange programmes.

FACULTY MEMBERS

Bachelor of Laws (BL)

During the early years the Law Department only offered a law degree known as Bachelor of Laws (BL) degree as a part-time post graduate degree course. The BL Degree consisted of a two year course of study.

Bachelor of Arts in Law (BA (Law)), Bachelor of Laws (LLB)

With the advent of the Revolutionary Council after 1962, a Committee to reform legal education was established, and significant reforms were accomplished by the Higher Education Law of 1964. After 1964, the law course at the University of Yangon became a fulltime course. Under this system, students obtained a BA (Law) degree after 4 years of study and had to continue their studies for another year to get their LLB degree.

Faculty

Established in 1920, the University of Yangon has an illustrious yet tumultuous history. Once among the largest universities in Southeast Asia and recognized as a premier institution of higher learning, it has endured decades of rigid external control, isolation and lack of resources. Today the legacy of limited capacity and freedom continues to hamper the University's ability to contribute to meeting the needs of Myanmar's society and the on-going economic, political and social transformations in the country.
